

Lisa F. Clark has a PhD in political science from Simon Fraser University and is a research associate in the Department of Bioresource Policy and Business Economics at the University of Saskatchewan.

She is currently examining the political and socioeconomic dimensions of innovative food assistance products as part of the Global Institute for Food Security funded project entitled Innovative Food Assistance Products to Address Global Malnutrition – A Canadian-Ethiopian Multidisciplinary Research Partnership.

Her research interests include food security, food quality standards and labelling, food safety regulations, technology and innovation in the agrifood system and risk governance.

Lisa has published articles in Food Policy, Science and Public Policy, Social Philosophy Today and most recently, Food Law & Policy. Her new book, The Changing Politics of Organic Food in North America (Edward Elgar) is now available.